October 12, 2014

Hi! It's now October and I am busily planning my fifth trip to Japan. The two-week trip will be the beginning of December. I am returning to a few of my favorite places like Nara, the ancient capital and Kyoto, an exquisite city of historic temples, gardens, delicious cuisine, and all kinds of fascinating, unusual customs, and of course, visiting Tokyo.

I have elected to stay for a few days at a few ryokans, small traditional Japanese inns, where you sleep on futons and often dine on low tables in your room enjoying multiple course dinners. The foods are, of course, a mystery to me. Luckily they have all been delicious and beautifully presented.

I am considering staying a few nights in the mountains above Kyoto in a rural Japanese ryokan or perhaps staying in Hiroshima for a few days. Will keep you posted. If anyone is interested in joining me, that is in good physical shape to get down onto the futon, and would like to enjoy a great adventure, please let me know. You will find the people the kindest, most hospitable; even though they don't speak English very well, you will certainly be treated well. If you want to go, let me know right away as I am booking the reservations this week.

I will soon be sending out a 10-day itinerary to Venice or Verona, Italy for April or May.

Hope you are enjoying the beautiful weather.
